Executive Summary

2025 marked the 60th anniversary of the establishment of the New York City Landmarks Preservation Commission (LPC), and its mission to protect New York City's architecturally, historically, and culturally significant buildings and sites. The Commission was created in 1965 through groundbreaking legislation in response to the accelerating loss of historically significant buildings in New York City, most notably Pennsylvania Station.

In the intervening years, the Commission has saved many beloved New York landmarks from imminent or likely destruction, from Grand Central Terminal to Radio City Music Hall, the Broadway Theaters to the African Burial Ground, JFK's TWA Terminal to the Duffield Street Underground Railroad House, Coney Island's Cyclone and Parachute Jump to Bronx Community College's Gould Memorial Library. Landmarking has also helped preserve neighborhoods across New York City, from Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant to Harlem's Sugar Hill, Queens' Jackson Heights to Staten Island's Sailors' Snug Harbor, the Bronx's Grand Concourse to Brooklyn's Ditmas Park, and more.

More than 60 years later, more than 38,000 properties in New York City enjoy landmark protections, including 1,479 individual landmarks, 125 interior landmarks, 12 scenic landmarks, and 159 historic districts and historic district extensions. But the rate, type, and geography of designations has varied widely over the years.

With this report, an updated version of a first-of-its-kind analysis of landmark designations by Mayoral Administration first released in mid-2024, we take a look at how these important actions varied by the occupant of Gracie Mansion, and how major changes in the landmark law and policy may have affected designations.

The patterns that emerge could not be more clear, though some may be surprising.

Mayor Adams is clearly an outlier among New York City mayors since the Landmarks Preservation Commission was first established, as he oversaw on an annual basis by far the fewest overall designations; the fewest individual landmark designations; and the fewest historic district designations as compared to almost any of his fellow chief executives. "Only Mayors Beame and Giuliani come close to approaching Adams in their lack and limited breadth of landmark designations, though Adams was demonstrably behind his fellow Mayors in this regard. Additionally, the few historic districts designated under Mayor Adams were on the whole far smaller than those of any of his predecessors, encompassing fewer buildings, and preserving less of our city's history.

Also notable is that since the passage of Intro. 775-A in 2016 — proposed and lobbied for by the real estate industry, to establish time limits for the LPC to consider landmark and historic district designations — the number of landmark designations has dropped dramatically. Annual designations are down by 60%, the number of historic district designations is down by nearly 17%, the size of historic districts designated has shrunk by over 50%, and total numbers of buildings designated are down by 61% as compared to the period preceding the passage of the law.

Additionally, since the adoption of the Landmarks Preservation Commission's "Equity Framework" — intended to ensure a more diverse array of sites is recognized and protected, reflecting the entirety of New York City's diverse communities and neighborhoods — the number of designations in Upper Manhattan and the Outer Boroughs has actually declined by almost 50%, while those in the Manhattan Core have declined by almost 80%.

This period has largely overlapped with the tenure of the Adams Administration. No historic districts have been designated in the Manhattan Core (Community Boards 1–8) since 2016, whereas prior to that on average just over one historic district was designated in that part of New York City each year.

Finally, it's also notable that in recent years, and accelerated under the Adams Administration, an increasingly large percentage of the small number of landmarks designated faced no current or foreseeable future threats, even as sites and areas that did face such threats were denied consideration for landmark status.

Of the increasingly small number of landmark designations made, a growing percentage were of sites already protected from destruction — they were already landmarked; they were already designated parks or cemeteries, which prevents destruction of the existing use; they were city-owned, and thus already could not be destroyed without city consent; or the density of development on the site as compared to what existing zoning rules would allow meant that demolition would be extremely unlikely. The shrinking number, breadth, and frequency of designations, and the ignoring of threatened sites in favor of those that face no apparent threat, run contrary to a key intended purpose of the establishment of the Commission in 1965 in the wake of the loss of Pennsylvania Station.

This report raises the question with the new Mamdani administration and with all Mayoral administrations that follow: will the unwillingness to recognize and protect our city's history exhibited by the Adams administration become the norm, or will we return to a nearly 60-year tradition of vigorously ensuring our city's histories are valued and preserved?

Mayor Adams has overseen by far the fewest overall designations, individual landmark designations, and historic district designations annually as compared to almost any of his fellow chief executives.

Definitions and Methodology

General Definitions

Landmark designations:

Any individual action by the Landmarks Preservation Commission designating a building, site, structure, interior or exterior space, park or district. This includes individual landmark designations, historic district designations, historic district extensions, amendments to prior designations, scenic landmark designations, and interior landmark designations. Over 90% of all landmark designations are individual landmark designations, historic district designations, or historic district extensions.

Historic districts:

In this report, this refers to both historic districts and historic district extensions, with each counted as a separate historic district. Thus for example the Greenwich Village Historic District (1969), Greenwich Village Historic District Extension I (2006), and Greenwich Village Historic District Extension II (2010) are counted as three separate historic districts, and three separate landmark designations. Extensions may be as large as or even larger than districts, and range in size from one building (Gramercy Park Historic District Extension, 1988) to 613 buildings (Park Slope Historic District Extension I, 2012).

Buildings designated:

The total number of buildings whose exteriors fall under the regulation of the Landmarks Preservation Commission due to landmark designations. This includes all buildings within designated historic districts, as well as individual landmark designations (which can include multiple buildings; the Williamsburg Houses, an “individual landmark,” includes 20 buildings). This does not include buildings that are only interior landmarks (typically only covering a single space on the interior of the building, such as a room), parks (several of which are scenic landmarks), trees (there are two landmarked trees), graveyards and cemeteries, archaeological sites, and expansions of existing designations that do not include any buildings, as well as individual landmark designations of something other than buildings, such as sidewalk clocks, lampposts, historic street plans, sculptures, gates, fences, fountains, and signs. Individually landmarked bridges, such as the Queensborough Bridge, were counted as buildings.

Geographic Definitions

Manhattan Core:

As defined by the Department of City Planning, Manhattan Community Boards 1–8. For the purposes of this report, we also include within the “Manhattan Core” areas that do not fall within any community board, including Central Park, which is surrounded on three of four sides by Community Boards 1–8, and Governor’s Island, Liberty Island, and Ellis Island, which are within Manhattan Community Board 1 but not typically counted as part of the “Manhattan Core.”

Upper Manhattan:

Manhattan Community Boards 9–12.

Outer Boroughs:

The Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, and Staten Island.

Note: For the purposes of this report, landmark designations that fall within more than one section of the city are counted as half a designation within each of the two areas within which they fall. Thus the Brooklyn Bridge is counted as half a landmark under Outer Boroughs, and half a landmark under Manhattan Core.

Methodology

Data from 2023 and before was extracted directly from NYC Open Data. For 2024 and 2025 data, Landmarks Preservation Commission Public Hearing Actions were reviewed. To ensure accuracy and completeness, we cross-referenced LPC’s 2024 and 2025 Press Releases, which typically announce each new designation. A compilation of all data accrued on all landmark designations from the founding of the Landmarks Preservation Commission in 1965 through through the end of 2025 (end of the Adams administration) can be found in the second addendum of this report.

Designations were carefully reviewed for appropriate inclusion in the building count. Interior landmark designations by themselves were not counted as “buildings designated,” but by far the majority of buildings containing interior landmark designations are also designated as individual landmarks or are located within historic districts, and those designations are counted as buildings designated.

Introduction

Landmarks and historic districts have become a significant force in shaping the development and character of New York City. Covering about 4.6% of city land and found in each of the five boroughs, these designations have an arguably outsized impact, as they include many of our city's most iconic sites and neighborhoods, as well as beloved touchstones across the city that help define communities and their identities. They disproportionately attract investment, tourism, and interest, and include everything from affordable housing to theaters; monuments, parks, and graveyards; houses of worship, schools, and community centers; free-standing houses and densely packed, cheek-by-jowl apartment buildings; farmhouses and skyscrapers. Though they vary in size and form, they are often among the places in our city that might otherwise be most vulnerable to loss.

While limited (for individual and interior landmark designation) to structures that are at least 30 years old, landmarks and historic districts cover every phase of New York's development, since the beginning of European colonization in the 17th century. They include sites that mark our history of slavery and segregation, and even include archaeological sites, which recognize over 8,000 years of Native American presence on this land.

The agency in charge of designating our city's landmarks and historic districts is the New York City Landmarks Preservation Commission. A city agency, its chair and 10 other commissioners are all appointed by the Mayor. While the appointments and designations are subject to the approval of the City Council, those decisions are rarely if ever overruled by the Council, and thus the Commission and its actions, like those of all city agencies, largely reflect the priorities and approach of the sitting Mayor. And each Mayor has evidenced demonstrably different approaches to the agency and its work. Changes in the law governing landmark designations, as well as in policies guiding them, have also had noticeable impacts on how this work has been carried out.

This analysis for the first time looks at changes in designation activity by Mayor, as well as before and after the adoption of relevant legislation and policies.

Comparisons by Mayor

Robert F. Wagner July–December 1965 (six months) *	John V. Lindsay 1966–1973 (eight years)	Abraham D. Beame 1974–1977 (four years)
Edward I. Koch 1978–1989 (12 years)	David N. Dinkins 1990–1993 (four years)	Rudolph W. Giuliani 1994–2001 (eight years)
Michael R. Bloomberg 2002–2013 (12 years)	Bill de Blasio 2014–2021 (eight years)	Eric L. Adams 2022–Dec. 31, 2025 (four years)

Mayor Wagner inducted the 11 members of the Landmarks Preservation Commission on June 29, 1965*

After an initial and understandable burst of activity by the Commission in its earliest days under Mayors Wagner and Lindsay, the number and breadth of designations have waxed and waned over the years, with Mayors Dinkins and Bloomberg being the most active, Mayors Koch and de Blasio performing somewhere in the middle, and Mayors Giuliani and Beame bringing up the rear in terms of designation activity. However, the one Mayor who is clearly an outlier throughout the Commission’s nearly 60-year history is Eric Adams, who underperforms even Mayors Beame and Giuliani by nearly all measures.

Overall Designations

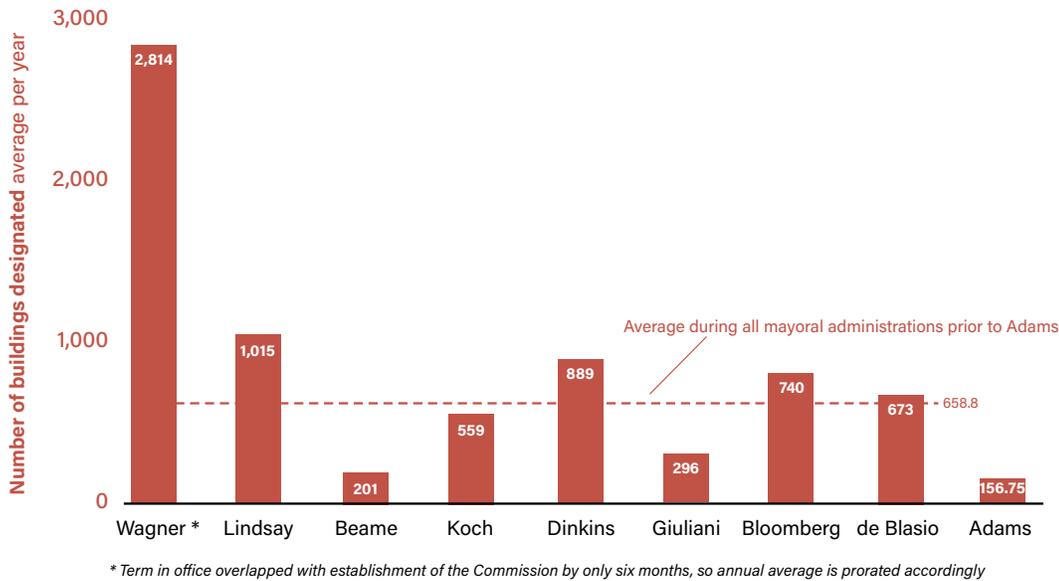

We analyzed designation activity using the following criteria: average number or rate of landmark designations per year; average number or rate of historic district designations per year; and average number or rate of buildings designated per year (see General Definitions on page 6). Average size of historic districts in terms of number of buildings was also, where relevant, analyzed (see chart on next page).

Under Mayor Adams, we found fewer landmark designations took place per year than under any other Mayor. Mayor Wagner oversaw nearly eight times as many designations at an annual rate as Adams, and Mayor Dinkins almost three times as many. Adams' rate of landmark designations per year (9) was less than one-third that of his predecessors overall (30.6).

And landmark designations under Mayor Adams were the least far-reaching of any of his predecessors. On an annual basis, he oversaw the designation of just over 1/18th the number of buildings Mayor Wagner did, and barely more than one-sixth the number of Mayor Dinkins. Adams' rate of buildings designated per year (156.75) was well under one quarter that of his predecessors overall (658.8).

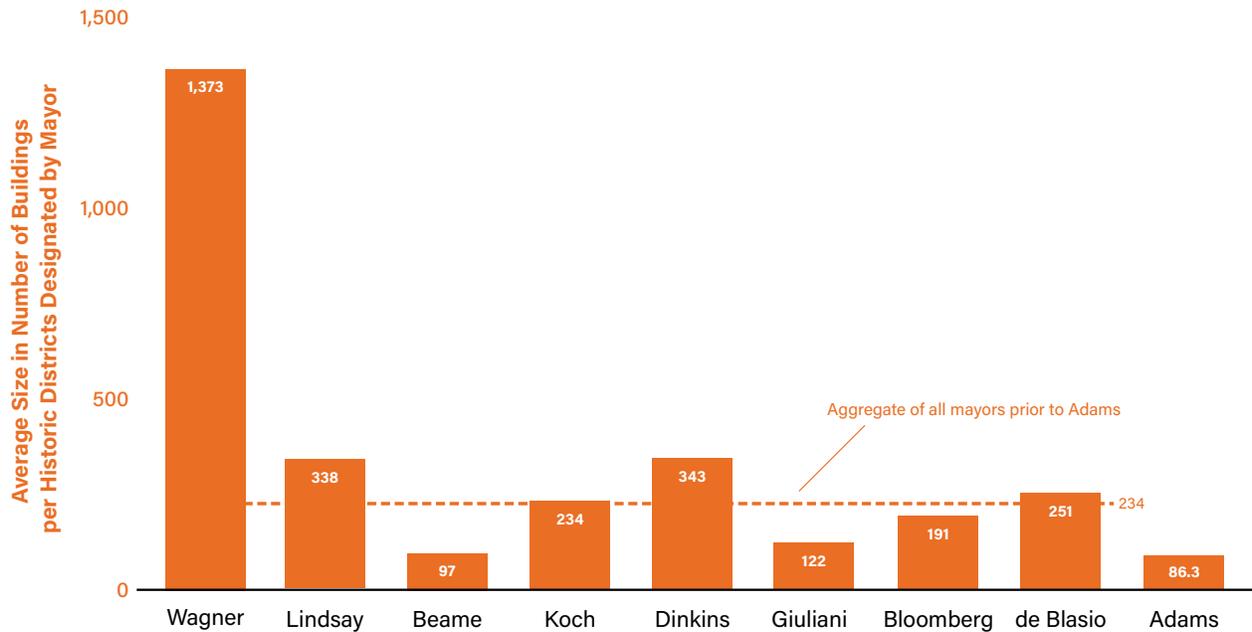

The rate of historic districts designated per year under the Adams Administration was less than all his peers except Beame, whom he tied for last place. Wagner's mayoralty overlapped with just the first six months of the Commission's existence, and focused almost exclusively on individual landmark designations, before turning to the untried and more complicated task of historic district designations at the very end of his term. Nevertheless, Beame added more historic districts at an annualized rate than Adams did.

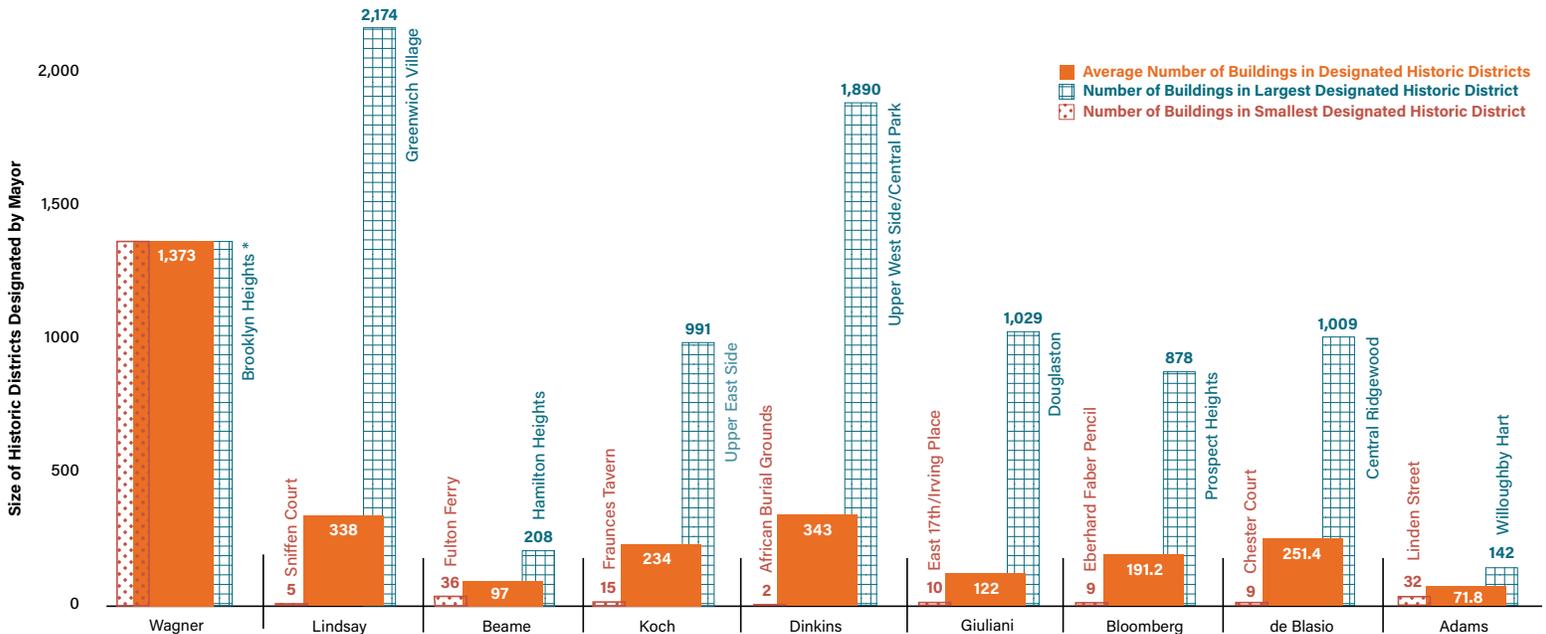

But Adams is by far at the back of the pack in terms of the size of the very few historic districts he designated, which are just over one-third the size of the average district designated over the course of the Commission's existence, and on average roughly a quarter the size of those designated under Mayor Dinkins, and 1/16th the size of those designated by Mayor Wagner.

Even the largest historic district designated under Mayor Adams is only about three-fifths the size of the average historic district designated over the course of the Commission's existence, and just 1/13th the size of Mayor Dinkins' largest district, 1/15th the size of Mayor Lindsay's largest district, and not even 1/7th the size of Mayor Giuliani's largest district.

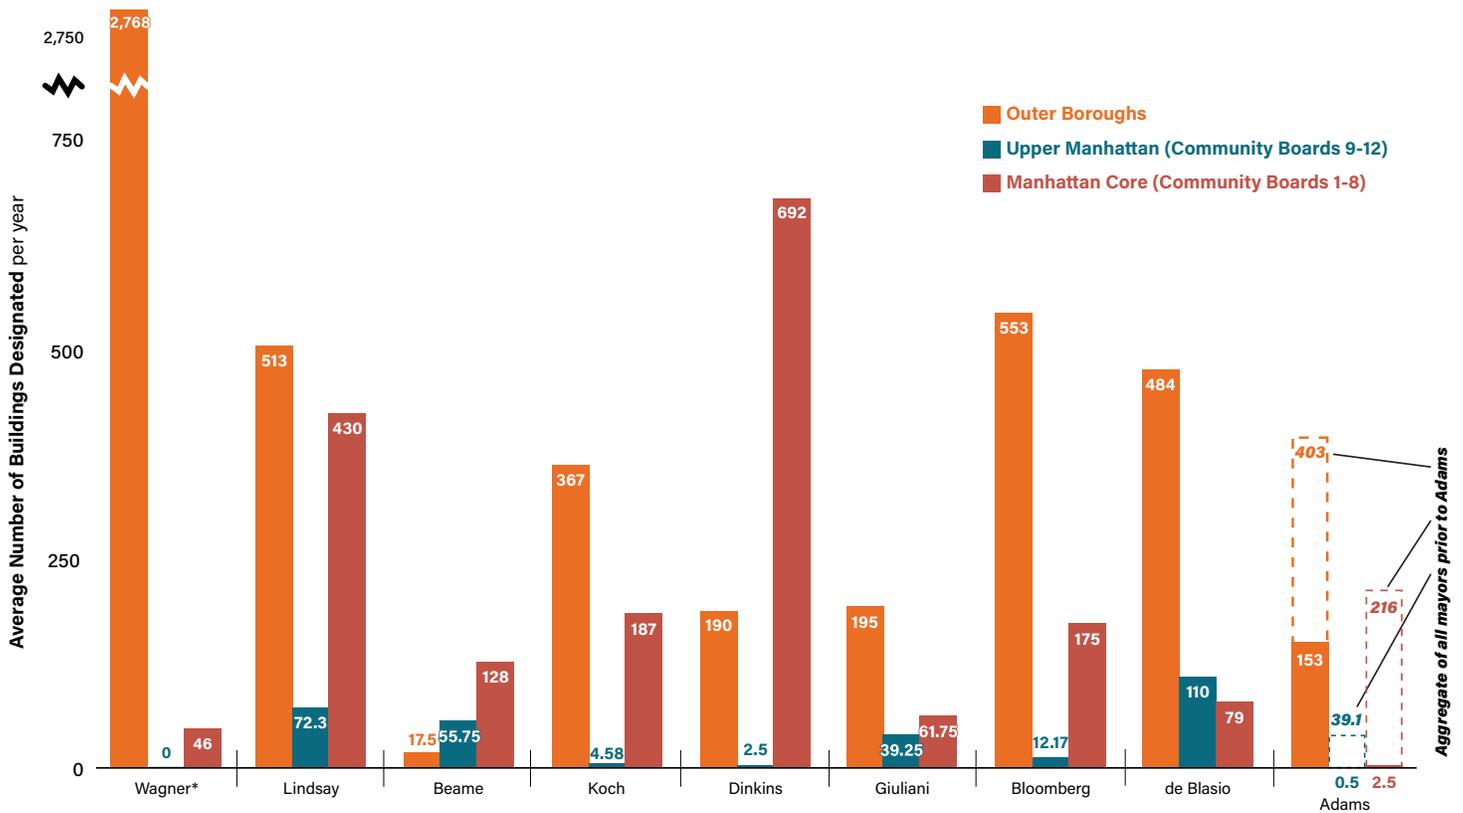

* Brooklyn Heights was the only historic district designated in the Wagner administration.

Mayors and Landmark Designations by Geography

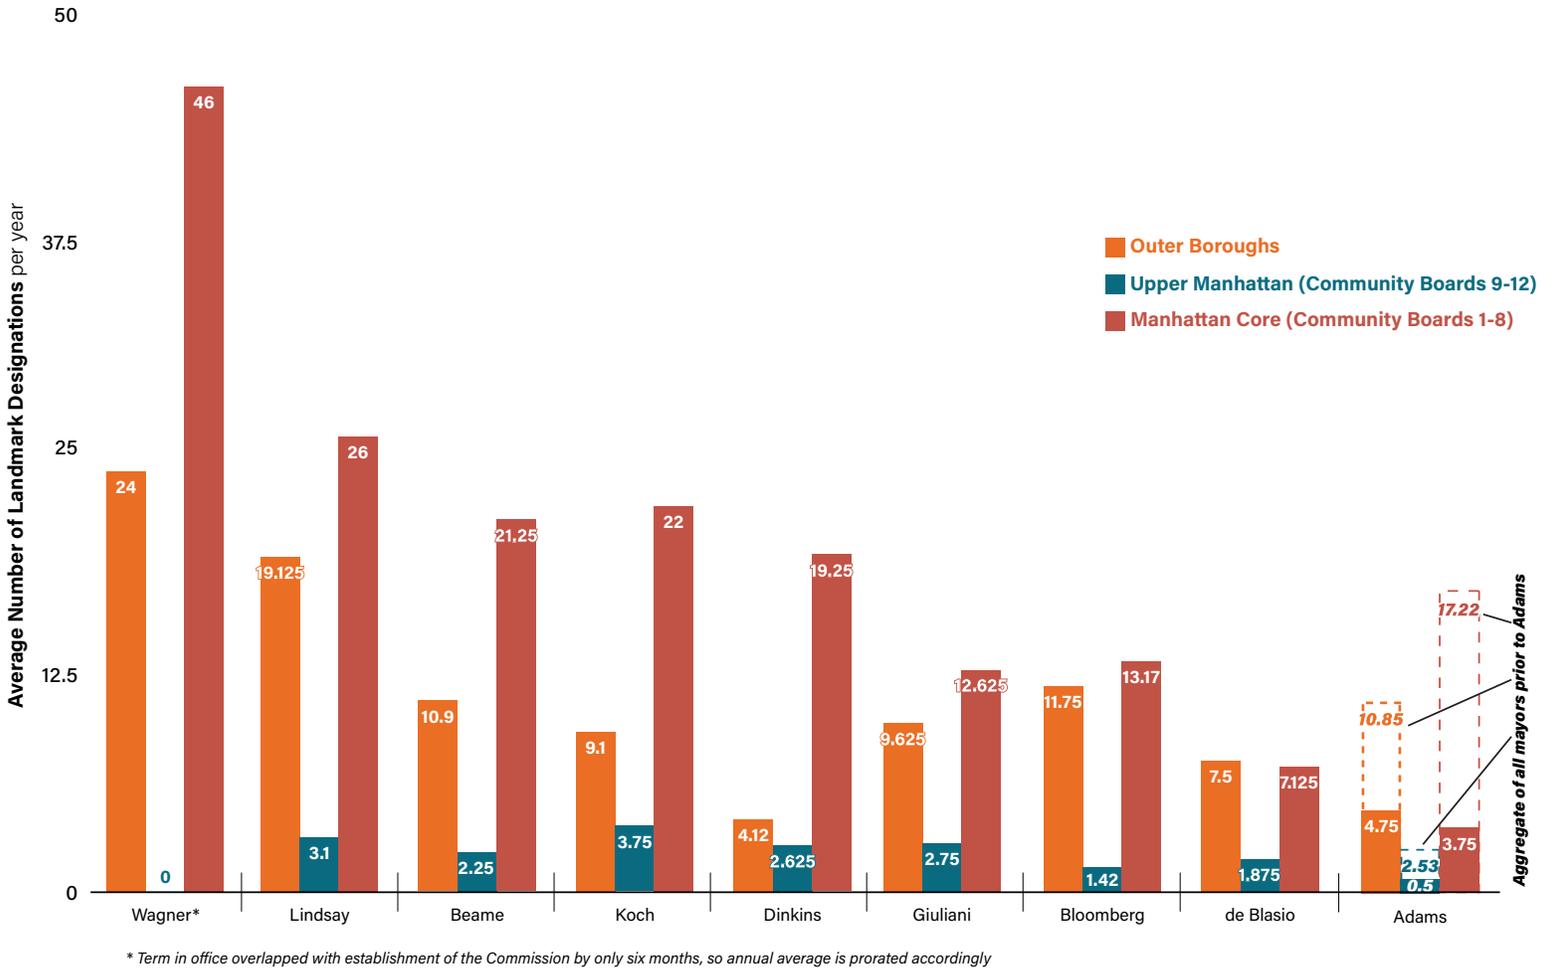

An examination of the geography of designations by mayors shows Mayor Adams continues to be an outlier, far and away at the bottom of the pack or quite near it, in every category.

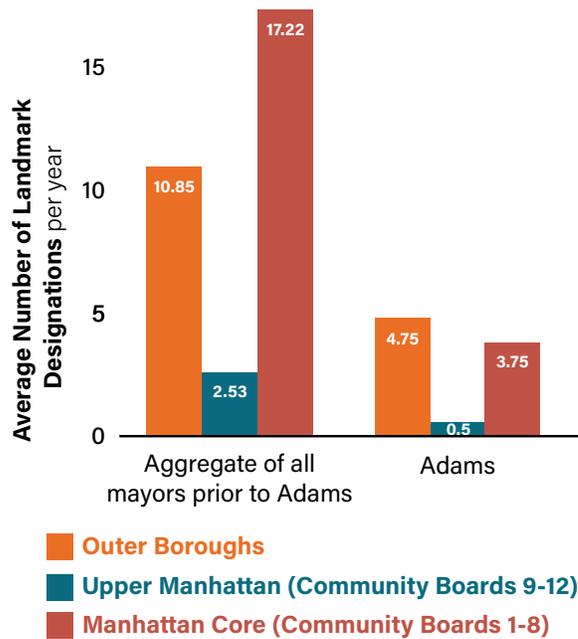

* Term in office overlapped with establishment of the Commission by only six months, so annual average is prorated accordingly

Outer Boroughs

Adams designated as landmarks fewer buildings on an annual basis in the Outer Boroughs than any of his predecessors, except the fiscal crisis-wracked Mayor Beame. His nearest rival, Mayor Dinkins, nevertheless designated approximately 25% more buildings annually in the Outer Boroughs than Adams, while other recent Mayors like de Blasio and Bloomberg each designated about three-and-a-half times as many buildings in the Outer Boroughs annually as Adams did. Overall, Adams designated just over a third the number of buildings annually in the Outer Boroughs as compared to all his predecessors combined (153 per year vs. 403).

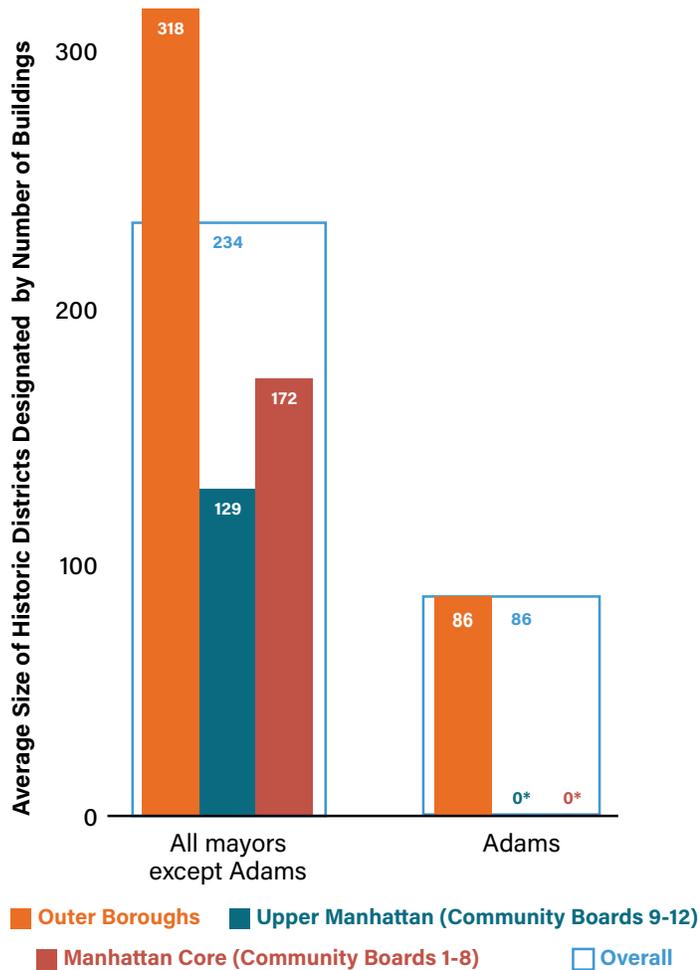

Adams also largely paled in comparison to his predecessors in total number of Outer Borough designations. Only Mayor Dinkins had just slightly fewer on an annual basis than Adams, whereas even the otherwise largely landmark-averse Mayor Beame oversaw more than double the designations annually in the Outer Boroughs compared to Adams. Mayors Lindsay and Wagner oversaw roughly four and five times as many on an annual basis, respectively. Overall, under Mayor Adams there were well under half the average annual number of landmark designations in the Outer Boroughs compared to his predecessors — though this was his area of greatest landmarking activity.

And while the number of historic districts designated annually in the Outer Boroughs under Adams compares favorably to many of his predecessors, when you take into account the actual size of these districts, the picture changes considerably.

Adams' Outer Borough historic districts were roughly one-quarter the size of his predecessors. So while they may have been more numerous than some prior mayors', they were also vastly less extensive in their size and breadth.

* No historic districts were designated by Mayor Adams in Upper Manhattan or the Manhattan Core during his entire term.

Upper Manhattan

Here the disparity in designations is even more dramatic, with 220 times as many buildings being designated annually in Upper Manhattan under Adams' predecessor, Mayor de Blasio, as compared to him. Even under Adams' nearest rival for lack of designations in Upper Manhattan, Mayor Dinkins, the number of buildings designated was five times as great. When compared to all his predecessors combined, Adams designated just over 1/80th the number of buildings annually in Upper Manhattan, having designated only two his entire term in office. Adams' annual rate of landmark designations in Upper Manhattan was also by far worse than all his predecessors (0.5 vs. 2.53) except Mayor Wagner, whose term only overlapped with the existence of the Landmarks Preservation Commission by six months. He designated no historic districts in Upper Manhattan during his entire term in office.

Manhattan Core

However, nowhere is the contrast between Mayor Adams and all his predecessors more dramatic than in the Manhattan Core (Manhattan Community Boards 1-8), which contains many of the oldest and most historic buildings in New York City. Under Mayor Adams, the number of buildings designated in the Manhattan core annually (2.5) was only about 1.16% the number designated annually by his predecessors (216). Mayor Dinkins designated almost 300 times as many buildings in the Manhattan core annually (692), while the Mayor with the second slowest pace of buildings designated in the Manhattan core, Mayor Wagner, nevertheless did so at nearly 20 times the pace of Mayor Adams. Mayor Adams didn't designate a single historic district in the Manhattan core, compared to 1.2 annually during his predecessors' collective tenures, and his overall pace of landmark designations in this part of the city was the slowest of any Mayor, and barely over one-fifth the pace of his predecessors combined.

Mayor Adams designated barely 1% the number of buildings annually in the Manhattan core as his predecessors — the fewest of any Mayor.

Historic District Sizes

The size of historic districts designated also show a dramatic across-the-board decrease from Mayor Adams' predecessors to the current Mayor. The size of historic districts designated under Mayor Adams are nearly two-thirds smaller than those of his predecessors.

Broken down geographically, the averages are even more stark. Having designated no historic districts whatsoever in either Upper Manhattan or the Manhattan Core, Adams averages zero, as compared to 129 and 172 buildings per historic district, respectively, for his predecessors. And his average Outer Borough Historic District is about 73% smaller than the average designated by his predecessors.

Changes in Law

Who is Mayor is not the only factor worthy of analysis, or which would appear to affect the rate, type, and breadth of landmark designations in New York City. Laws have been passed and amended in the Landmarks Preservation Commission's six-decade existence that also affect the agency's work.

1973 Amendments to the Landmarks Law

One of the first and most significant amendments to the landmarks law came at the end of 1973. That amendment for the first time allowed the Commission to designate interior landmarks (spaces on the interior of buildings that are customarily open to the public, excluding places of religious worship) and scenic landmarks (public parks). It also allowed the Commission to consider designations on a rolling basis, rather than to have six-month periods where it considered designations followed by three-year hiatuses.

The Commission began almost immediately to designate interior and scenic landmarks, and there are now 125 and 12 of each, respectively. As these make up approximately 0.35% of all landmarked sites and less than 8% of all landmark designations, their introduction did not appear to make a statistically significant change in the rate of landmark designations, nor did the amendment's allowance for the Commission to make designations on a more flexible, rolling schedule.

In fact, the years immediately following the amendment's passage had some of the lowest levels of designation activity by the Commission (until recently), in spite of the fact that more kinds of landmark designations were possible and fewer restrictions existed upon how designations could be done. Those years coincided with the Administration of Mayor Abe Beame, whose rate of landmark designations was the second lowest of all Mayors, exceeded only by Mayor Adams. Following the end of Beame's Administration, the rate of landmark designations picked up again under Mayor Koch, thus indicating the Mayor may have a much bigger impact upon landmark designations than this change in the law, at least in terms of frequency or breadth of designations.

Amendments to the Landmarks Law in 1973 for the first time allowed designation of scenic landmarks such as Prospect Park (top) and interior landmarks such as Radio City Music Hall (bottom).

That the overall pace of designations in the period following the passage of the 1973 amendments was actually slightly slower than the period before likely also reflects the intense burst of activity by the Commission in its early years that preceded the 1973 amendments, racing to protect many of the city's most iconic and vulnerable landmarks.

It should be noted that as per a 2019 ruling by the NYS Court of Appeals, and a 2014 decision by the NYC Landmarks Preservation Commission, owners can substantially blunt the effect of interior landmark designation by making such spaces no longer accessible to the public, thus significantly limiting the efficacy of such designations (see more at "Choices of Designations, Avoiding Endangered Sites" on page 28).

Intro. 775-A (2016)

The passage of Intro. 775-A in 2016, for the first time putting in place restrictions on how long the Landmarks Preservation Commission could take to consider sites for designation, appears to have had a more noticeable, and perhaps predictable, impact than the 1973 amendments to the landmarks law.

Advocates and City Councilmembers rallying at City Hall against the passage of Intro. 775-A prior to the vote.

The bill, limiting to one year the time the LPC could take to consider an individual landmark for designation, and two years for a district, was proposed and lobbied for by real estate interests that had long opposed landmark designations. Groups such as Village

Preservation argued strongly against the bill, citing that complicated, controversial, and large designations typically take longer for the Commission to designate (rightly or wrongly), and that many of our most beloved city landmarks and historic districts took significantly longer than Intro. 775's prescribed time limits would allow. A chilling effect upon designations was predicted.

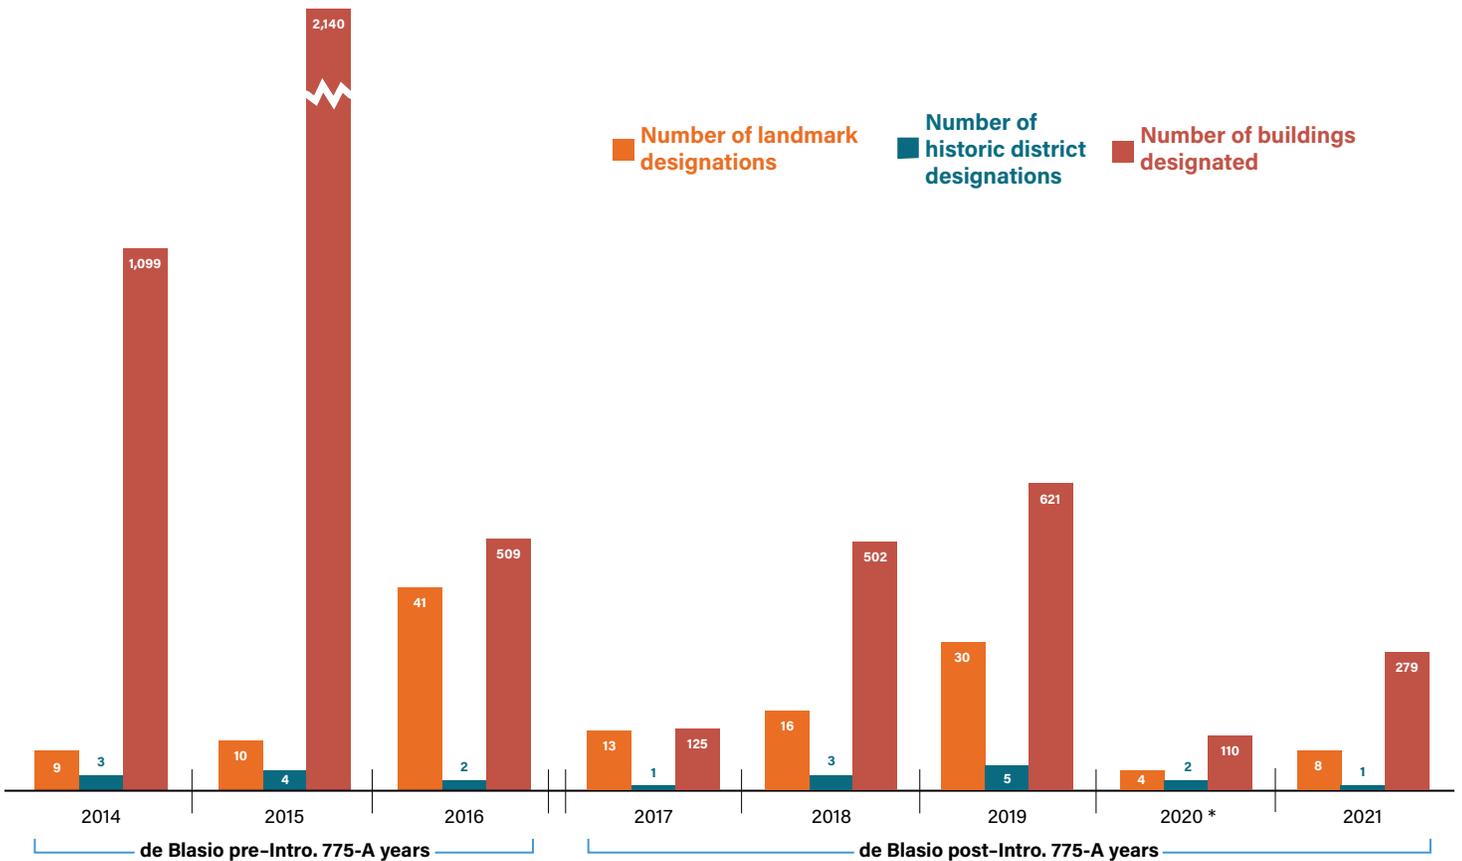

This is exactly what happened. The years before and after the passage of Intro. 775-A are a study in contrasts (though the bill was passed mid-year in 2016, by its nature its impact would really only begin to be felt in 2017).

Both the annual number of landmark designations and the number of buildings included in landmark designations (i.e., individual landmark and historic district designations) fell precipitously — by over 60% each. And while the number of historic districts designated annually fell by a more modest 23%, that belies the fact that the average size of historic districts designated in the post-Intro. 775-A era fell by about 53%, thus making the true measure closer to a 64% drop in terms of the number of buildings designated via historic districts. This also closely tracked predictions that the change in law would serve as an impediment to more complicated and larger designations.

Along these lines, it should be noted that since the passage of Intro. 775-A, there has not been a single historic district or historic district extension designated in the Manhattan Core – the area in which landmark designations frequently face the most powerful and well-resourced pushback.

*The LPC was only semi-operational for several months in 2020 due to COVID-19.

Unlike the 1973 amendments to the landmarks law, Intro. 775-A came into effect not as a new Mayor was assuming office, thus obscuring its impact, but in the middle of Mayor de Blasio's two terms in office — offering a clearer opportunity to see its effect.

*The LPC was only semi-operational for several months in 2020 due to COVID-19.

During Mayor de Blasio's tenure, after Intro. 775-A was passed the number of annual landmark designations dropped by about 29%, the number of historic districts designated dropped by 20%, and the number of buildings designated dropped by an astounding 74%.

Removing 2020 from the calculus — during which the Landmarks Preservation Commission was only semi-operational for months due to the COVID-19 pandemic — the decline is still a rather dramatic 16%, 16.67%, and 69.5%, respectively.

This doesn't tell us conclusively that Intro. 775-A was the sole cause of the significant drop in designation activity following the bill's passage, and continuing through the Adams Administration to this day.

Designation activity has declined even further under Mayor Adams as compared to the post-Intro. 775-A years of Mayor de Blasio's Administration, pointing to the ability of Mayors to ultimately shape the work done by the Commission.

The years before and after the passage of Intro. 775-A are a study in contrasts.

But Intro. 775-A was also just one part of a concerted campaign led by real estate interests that reached increasing levels of prominence in the mid- to late 2010s, focusing on limiting or undoing regulations or policies that impeded unrestricted real estate development (such efforts also took the form of campaigns to remove the state's residential density cap, to undo contextual zoning limits in NYC, such as Mayor de Blasio's "Zoning for Quality and Affordability," and to increase the allowable size and types of development throughout NYC, such as Mayor Adams' "City of Yes"). Therefore how much Intro. 775-A by itself slowed down the rate and breadth of landmark designations, or was indicative of a far-reaching and impactful campaign to eliminate or reduce regulations that impede unfettered real estate development, is unclear.

Policy Changes: LPC's "Equity Framework" (January, 2021)

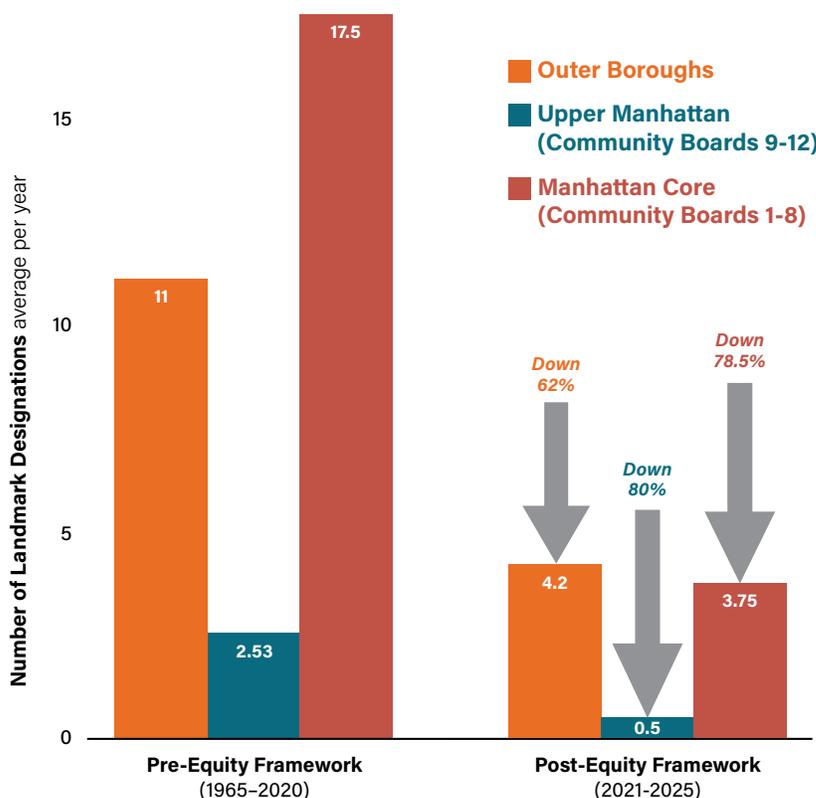

The Landmarks Preservation Commission's "Equity Framework,"

adopted at the beginning of 2021, does not have the effect of law, but does reflect an explicit commitment to policies and practices on the part of the Commission, begun under the de Blasio Administration and continued under the Adams Administration, regarding focus and priorities for the agency.

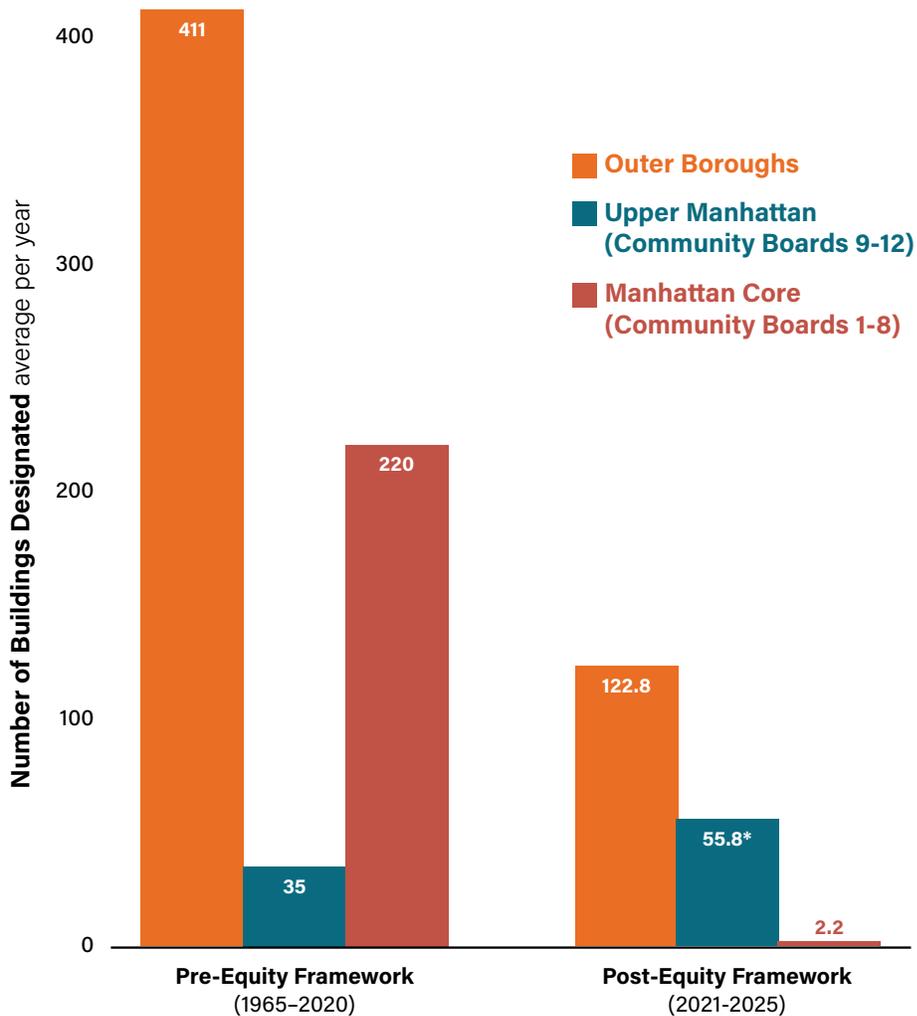

According to the Commission, the framework is intended to "ensure diversity and inclusion in designations, to make sure that we are telling the stories of all New Yorkers," offer "a set of priorities to ensure a more equitable representation of our city's diverse history through our designations," and ensure the "geographic diversity of designations."

While analyzing the efficacy of this framework is less easily quantifiable than some other data included in this report, it is not without basis for measure. One way of doing so is to look at the number and extent of designations the Commission has undertaken since the framework's adoption in the Outer Boroughs and in Upper Manhattan (Manhattan Community Boards 9-12), as opposed to what the city terms "the Manhattan Core" (Boards 1-8).

Perhaps somewhat surprisingly, by most measures, the designation activity of the Commission has actually declined in the Outer Boroughs and Upper Manhattan since the adoption of the Equity Framework, and rather dramatically so.

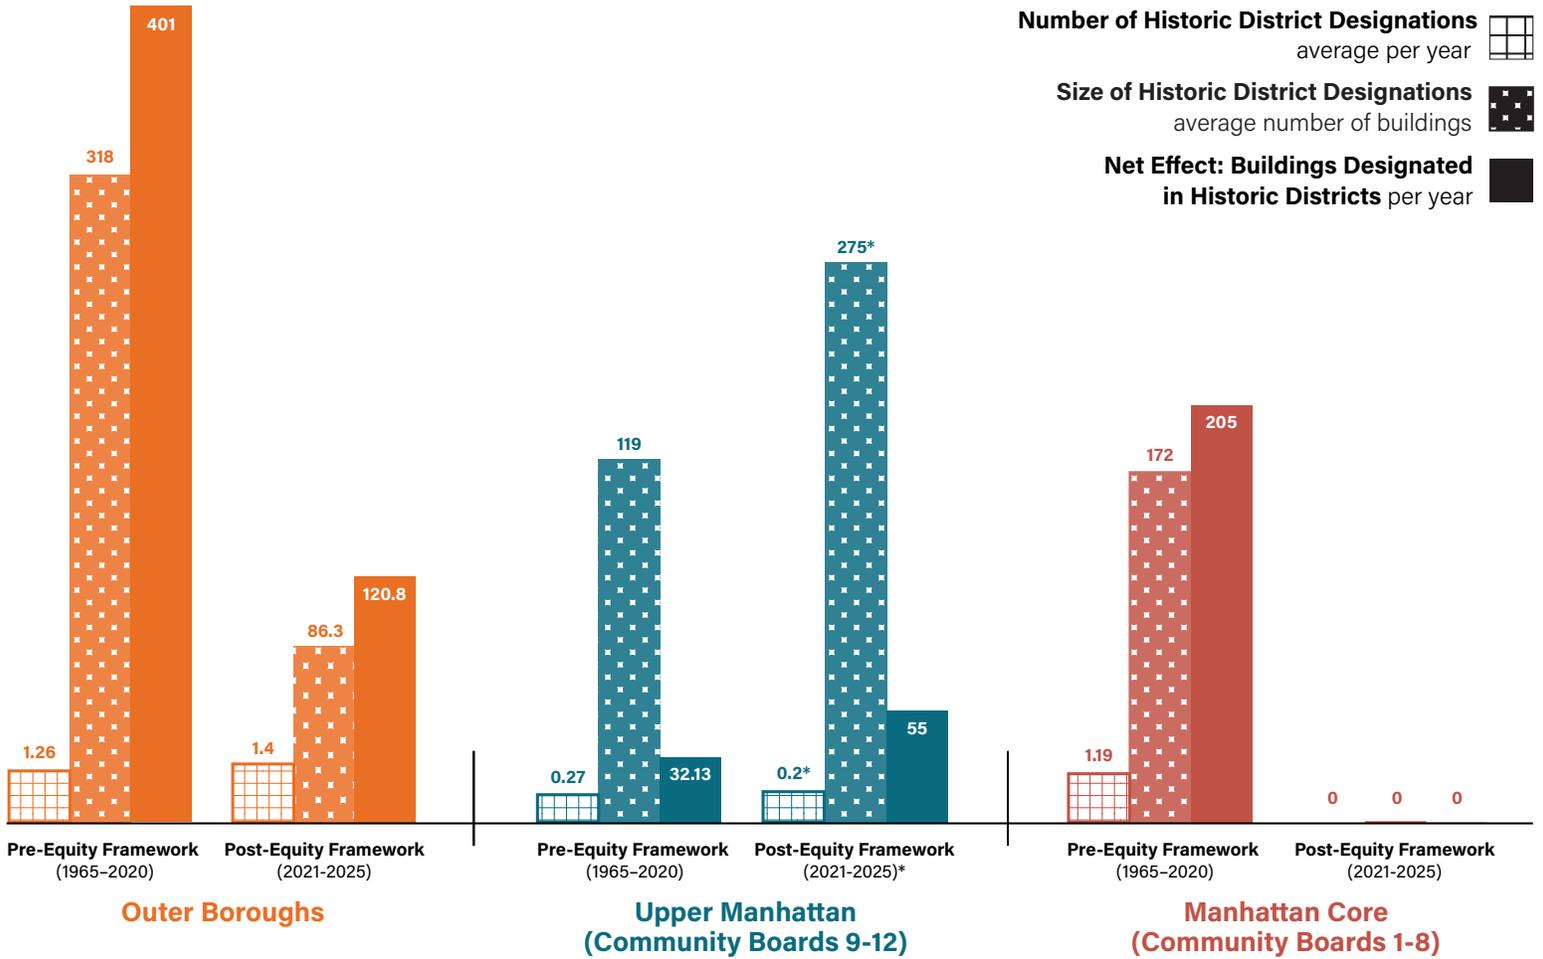

The number of annual landmark designations in the Outer Boroughs has declined by almost two-thirds since the adoption of the Equity Framework, and those in Upper Manhattan have declined by an astounding 80%.

 Note: Upper Manhattan building designations almost entirely reflect designation of a single district, Dorrance Brooks Square, in 2021.*

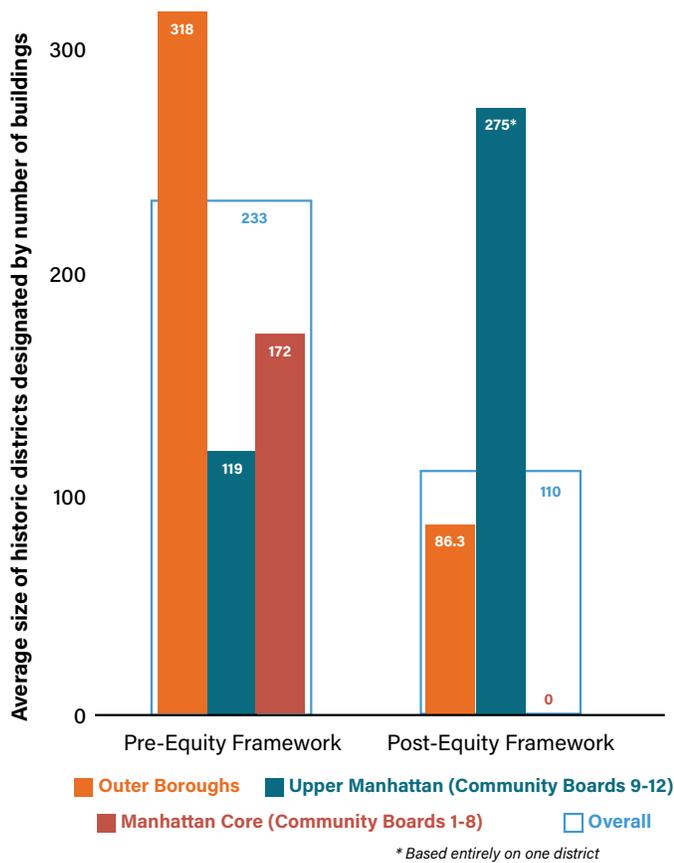

The number of buildings landmarked annually in the Outer Boroughs has declined by over 70% since the adoption of the Equity Framework as compared to before (122.8 vs. 411). The annual rate of buildings designated in Upper Manhattan has increased, but it should be noted that this is almost exclusively due to a single medium-sized historic district designation, Dorrance Brooks Square, enacted in 2021 shortly after the adoption of the Equity Framework, and in motion before its adoption. Without this single designation almost six years ago, the annual rate of building designations in Upper Manhattan would have shrunk by over 97% as compared to the pre-Equity Framework period, as the Commission has only designated four other buildings in Upper Manhattan in this five year period.

* Note: Upper Manhattan historic district designations reflect a single district, Dorrance Brooks Square, designated in 2021.

Similarly, while the annual rate of designation of historic districts in the Outer Boroughs has marginally increased since the adoption of the Equity Framework, the size of those districts has shrunk by 73%. This means the actual annual rate of historic districts designated in the outer boroughs, as measured by the number of buildings included, has declined by 70% for Upper Manhattan during this time period, this again is due exclusively to the designation of the Dorrance Brooks Square Historic District, the consideration of which began before, and was formally approved just after, the framework's adoption.

If there is any equity to be found in the trend in designations by the Commission since the adoption of the Equity Framework, it is perhaps only in that the drop in designations in the Manhattan Core has been markedly more severe than in the Outer Boroughs and Upper Manhattan. Since the adoption of the Equity Framework, in Manhattan Community Boards 1-8 the rate of designations has declined by 78.5%, and the number of buildings designated has declined astonishingly by 99%. Meanwhile the rate of historic district designations has declined, from on average 1.19 annually containing 175 buildings, to zero of each.

While the Outer Boroughs and Upper Manhattan may be getting a bigger slice of the landmarking pie than they were prior to the adoption of the Equity Framework, that pie has shrunk so dramatically that they are nevertheless, by most measures, actually getting drastically fewer designations than before the framework. Thus the falling tide seems to be lowering all boats, although some more sharply than others.

While undoubtedly the Equity Framework is not causing this decline in landmark designations across the city, it's clear that in spite of its promise, designations outside the Manhattan Core have actually declined since its adoption. At the same time, those within the Manhattan Core have slowed to less than a trickle.

Choices of Designations, Avoiding Endangered Sites

Some of the past designations by the Landmarks Preservation Commission that have saved sites from imminent or likely destruction or compromise (from upper l. to lower r.): Grand Central Terminal; TWA Terminal at JFK Airport; Duffield Street Underground Railroad House, Brooklyn; New Amsterdam Theater, West 42nd Street; Pepsi-Cola Sign, Long Island City; and Hunterfly Road Houses, Weeksville, Brooklyn

The number and breadth of landmark designations have dropped precipitously in recent years, especially under Mayor Adams, across all categories of designations. At the same time, the few designations have increasingly focused on sites that face no immediate or foreseeable threats; sites that already enjoy some protection or insulation from demolition or loss; and sites for which the designation will have little or no regulatory effect in terms of ensuring preservation of the site. In light of the shrinking number of designations, as well as the number of immediately or foreseeable endangered historic sites that the Commission has chosen not to designate, this trend is noteworthy.

Specifically, in recent years, a significant percentage of sites the Commission has chosen to designate have been:

- Those that are already landmarked (typically individual landmark designation of sites already designated as parts of historic districts — a practice begun in 2015)
- Those that are city-owned, and therefore the city already has the power to ensure their preservation without landmark designation (and by virtue of being city-owned, the Commission's oversight may be blunted and its regulatory decisions more easily influenced by the Mayor)

- City parks, which are city-owned, and which in addition to the above conditions, by virtue of state law are already protected from loss or compromise
- Cemeteries, which as a result of a variety of existing regulations are already encumbered and therefore difficult if not impossible to destroy or remove
- Interior landmarks, which have much more limited regulatory applicability than other types of designations, and which by virtue of recent court rulings and actions of the Commission may be made inaccessible to the public, thus limiting the Commission's regulatory power
- Those that by virtue of the density of their current development in relation to existing zoning regulations are unlikely to face any threat of demolition in any foreseeable time frame

The LPC was broadly criticized in 2019 for landmarking the overbuilt and not endangered 826 Broadway, while refusing to consider designation of other endangered buildings in its immediate vicinity South of Union Square.

Of the 10 landmark designations undertaken by the Landmarks Preservation Commission in 2025:

- one was already landmarked as part of a historic district
- two were interior landmarks
- two were buildings which are larger than zoning for the area allows, making demolition highly unlikely
- one was a historic district with zoning that would not allow significantly larger buildings than those currently built, making demolition highly unlikely

accounting for 60% of landmark designations that year

Of the nine landmark designations in 2024:

- one was a city-owned park
- one was a city-owned building
- one was a cemetery
- two were interior landmarks
- one had already sold its development rights

accounting for 66.7% of landmark designations that year

Of the 11 landmark designations in 2023:

- three were city-owned properties
- one was a cemetery

accounting for 36.36% of landmark designations that year.

Of the six landmark designations in 2022:

- two were already landmarked as part of existing historic districts
- one was a city-owned sites
- two were small historic districts that were uniformly built to a greater density than current zoning allows

accounting for 83% of landmark designations that year.

Of the eight landmark designations in 2021:

- two were city-owned buildings or structures
- one was a city-owned park
- one was overbuilt as compared to what existing zoning allows
- one was an interior landmark only

accounting for 62.5% of landmark designations that year.

Of the four landmark designations in 2020:

- one was a city-owned property

accounting for 25% of landmark designations that year.

Of the 30 landmark designations in 2019:

- five were previously landmarked as part of historic districts
- one was city-owned
- eight were overbuilt as compared to what existing zoning allows

accounting for 46.67% of landmark designations that year.

The Commission has in recent years, and especially under Mayor Adams, increasingly leaned on designation of properties that face no imminent or foreseeable threat, or where designation would have limited substantive regulatory effect as compared to existing conditions. Meanwhile, especially under Mayor Adams, the Commission has also chosen not to act on an increasing number of historically significant sites proposed for designation by the public and facing imminent or foreseeable threats, for which designation would make or have made a substantive difference in their preservation.

See the addendum on page 33 for a list of sites the Landmarks Preservation Commission has chosen not to landmark in recent years.

It should be noted that saving a historically significant building, site, or area from demolition is only one of several purposes of landmark designation, and from its earliest days the Commission has designated sites that faced no immediate or likely threat on any foreseeable horizon. Significant sites deserve the recognition as well as the protection of landmark designation regardless of whether they are likely to be lost any time soon, and designations can add essential information to the historical narrative and reflect the city's recognition of an important history, person, event, or community that had been previously overlooked.

But landmark designation is often also the only way to save an endangered historic site from destruction. Once such a site has been compromised, it cannot be brought back. With so few landmark designations being undertaken by the Commission in recent years, it's worth examining where sites which face imminent danger of threat lie within those priorities, and whether they are getting their due.

The Commission has, under recent Mayors, increasingly leaned on designation of properties that face no imminent or foreseeable threat, or where designation would have limited substantive regulatory effect as compared to existing conditions.

Some of the buildings the Landmarks Preservation Commission has, in recent years, failed to landmark (clockwise from upper l.): New York Eye and Ear Infirmary (threatened); Statuary at Parkchester (threatened); Dangler Mansion (demolished); St. Raymond's Church; Harlem Hospital Women's Pavilion with Coretta Scott and Martin Luther King, Jr. (demolished); Demarest Building (demolished); Hotel Pennsylvania (demolished); and San Isidoro y San Leandro Orthodox Catholic Church of the Mozarabic Rite (threatened)

Conclusion

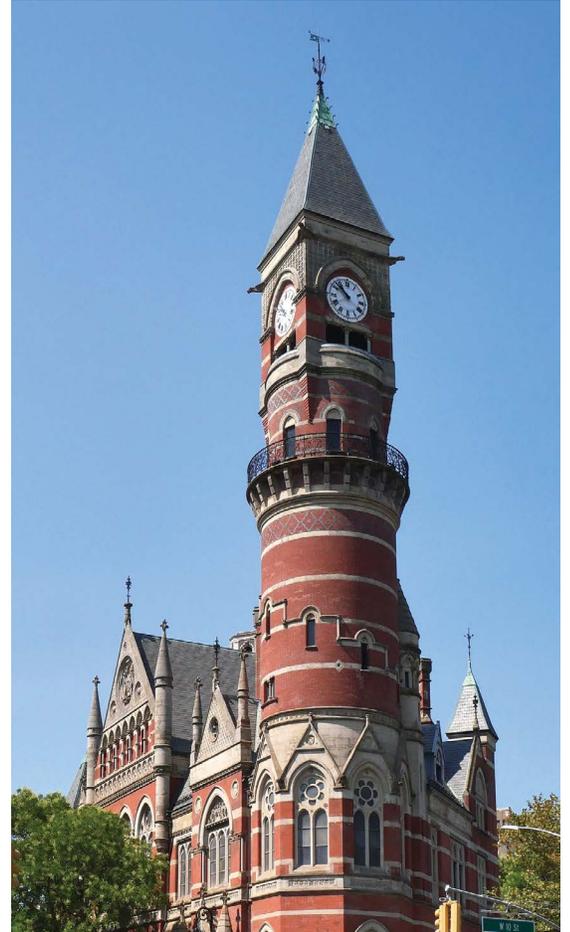

Clearly the single largest factor in determining the direction, breadth, and depth of activity by the Landmarks Preservation Commission is who is Mayor. While designation activity has risen and fallen over time, with a particularly potent surge in the Commission's earliest days, each occupant of City Hall has put their stamp on the Commission, with noticeable differences in emphasis and urgency.

The Mayor from 2022 to 2025, Eric Adams, was unmistakably at the clear far end of that continuum. The drop in designation activity under Mayor Adams is glaring, as is the emphasis on limited designations that would have limited regulatory effect. This stands in marked contrast to the original impetus behind the establishment of the Landmarks Preservation Commission, designed to prevent the ever-increasing loss of our city's historic monuments and cultural touchstones in the mid-20th century. And while the drop in landmark designations has been striking across the board, it has been particularly extreme in the Manhattan Core, where no new historic districts have been designated since 2016 and where, under the current mayor, landmark designations of any sort have been reduced by over 85%, and the number of buildings designated annually has been reduced by more than 99% compared to his predecessors.

Intro. 775-A, passed in 2016 under Mayor de Blasio's Administration, may be a cause, a symptom, or both of the profound shift away from designation activity. It is clear that following the passage of the law, such activity slowed considerably, and especially in areas where powerful forces tended to push back on designations. Nevertheless those trends clearly accelerated under Mayor Adams, well after the passage of the bill, indicating the bill alone is likely not the sole cause of this change.

Each new Mayor puts their stamp on the direction and priorities of the Landmarks Preservation Commission, and its mission to preserve our city's history and identify places which are critical to our collective story and identity. Recent Mayors have moved away from doing so in many key respects, one of which this report identifies: new landmark designations and protecting threatened history from loss. More than 60 years after the loss of Penn Station, and the both symbolic and very real diminution of life in New York City in which it resulted, a new Mayor has the opportunity to return to the proud tradition of protecting the irreplaceable heritage of our city and the myriad people and communities that helped shape it.

Addendum: Sites Not Landmarked

This noncomprehensive list presents sites submitted by the public in recent years that the Landmarks Preservation Commission has chosen not to landmark.

857 Riverside Drive, Manhattan (1851): Underground Railroad house (imminently threatened)

Renaissance Ballroom & Casino, 2341-49 Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. Boulevard, Manhattan (1921): a significant entertainment center in Harlem built by African Americans and not segregated (unlike the Cotton Club and other peer Harlem entertainment venues at the time), it hosted Jazz artists including Louis Armstrong, Fletcher Henderson, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Cab Calloway, Lionel Hampton, Bessie Smith, Lena Horne, Billie Holiday, and Ella Fitzgerald, and prize fights by Joe Louis (demolished)

Demolition, Renaissance Ballroom & Casino

The New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, 218 Second Avenue/301-309 East 13th Street, Manhattan (1856-1903): the oldest specialized hospital for people with seeing and hearing disabilities, where Helen Keller cut the ribbon and where the first Black ophthalmologist in America was given the opportunity to practice (imminently threatened)

5 Pointz Aerosol Art Center (former Neptune Water Meter Factory), 45-46 Davis Street, Long Island City, Queens (1892): haven and canvas for innumerable recognized graffiti artists (demolished)

Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, 229 West 14th Street, Manhattan (ca. 1850, 1902, 1921): the first church for a Spanish-speaking congregation in NYC (threatened)

Proposed Lower East Side Tenement Historic District, Manhattan (buildings continue to be compromised and lost)

Parkchester, the Bronx (1940) (architectural detail and statuary being destroyed)

Walt Whitman House, 99 Ryerson Street, Brooklyn (ca. 1850) (vulnerable)

Dangler Mansion, 441 Willoughby Street, Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn (1897) (demolished when the Landmarks Preservation Commission, after considerable delay, began but had not yet completed the designation process)

80 Fifth Avenue, Manhattan (1907-08): the headquarters from 1973 to 1986 of the first national LGBTQ+ rights organization in the country, and from 1930 to 1954 of the International Workers Order

Demolition, 5 Pointz

Sholem Aleichem Cooperative Houses, 3451 Giles Place, the Bronx (1926-27): one of the first nonprofit housing cooperatives built in NYC

(Former) NYC Woman Suffrage League Headquarters, 10 East 14th Street, Manhattan (1884) (vulnerable)

88 East 10th Street, Manhattan (1844): home and studio of artists Willem and Elaine de Kooning, Esteban Vicente, Isamu Noguchi, and African-American sculptor Selma Hortense Burke (vulnerable)

Manhasset Building, 850 Longwood Avenue, the Bronx (1905): Beaux Arts–style building, home of Casa Amadeo

55 Fifth Avenue, Manhattan (1912): home of Columbia and OKeh Recording Studios, where the first recordings of Billie Holiday and the first integrated music recordings were made

Theatre 80, 78-80 St. Marks Place, Manhattan (ca. 1845) (threatened)

African Burial Ground, 47-11 90th Street, Elmhurst, Queens (1828)

Former Gouverneur Hospital, 621 Water Street, Manhattan (1901-09)

National Register of Historic Places–eligible proposed South of Union Square Historic District, Manhattan: an architecturally distinguished area home to a plethora of sites significant to the movements for civil rights, LGBTQ+ rights, women’s rights and suffrage, the publishing and film industries, the labor movement, and the course of 19th- and 20th-century art and literature (buildings continue to be compromised and lost)

Harlem Hospital Women’s Pavilion, 22 West 137th Street, Manhattan (1935): where Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s life was saved after a near-fatal stabbing at a book signing in a nearby department store, and where generations of Black nurses were trained when other hospitals would not do so (demolished)

Demarest Building, 339 Fifth Avenue, Manhattan (1890): home of the world’s first electric-operated elevator, designed by James Renwick Jr. (demolished)

Hotel Pennsylvania, 401 Seventh Avenue, Manhattan (1919): formerly the world’s largest hotel, built as part of original Pennsylvania Station development, designed by McKim, Mead & White, subject of the Glenn Miller Orchestra jazz/swing classic “Pennsylvania 6-500” (demolished)

Intact Interior of the White Horse Tavern, 567 Hudson Street, Manhattan (1880): considered one of the great cultural and literary haunts and watering holes of the last century (vulnerable)

Proposed Oliver Street/Alfred E. Smith Historic District, Manhattan: birthplace of the former New York Governor and first Catholic major party candidate for President (vulnerable)

Demonstration protesting the 2018 demolition of the historic St. Denis Hotel within the proposed South of Union Square Historic District, at which Abraham and Mary Todd Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, Mark Twain, Alexander Graham Bell, P.T. Barnum, and Sarah Bernhardt stayed and Marcel Duchamp maintained a studio.

Demolition, Hotel Pennsylvania

Lenox Terrace Apartments, 484 Lenox Avenue, Manhattan (1958): (threatened) the first apartment complex in Harlem aimed at middle- and upper-income Black residents, designed to entice and keep successful African-Americans living in Harlem during a period of rapid flight from city centers; residents included Moms Mabley, Nipsey Russel, Mahalia Jackson, Ruth Brown, Percy Sutton, Ella Baker, Basil Paterson, and Charles Mingus, among many others

Hebrew Technical Institute, 28-34 Stuyvesant Street/225 East 9th Street, Manhattan (1891-1914): one of the first technical schools in the United States; buildings also bear significance in connection to the birth of the modern roller skate and the first male organization for female suffrage (vulnerable)

Union Carbide Building, 270 Park Avenue, Manhattan (1957-60): a landmark of modern architecture primarily designed by Natalie de Blois, one of the most prominent female architects of the 20th century (demolished)

San Isidoro y San Leandro Orthodox Catholic Church of the Mozarabic Rite, 345 East 4th Street, Manhattan (1891-92) (threatened)

The Labor Temple, 242 East 14th Street, Manhattan (1924): radical nonsectarian nonprofit designed to reach and provide services to people of all faiths and workers of all political orientations and philosophies; designed by renowned architect Emery Roth.

Proposed Bruckner Boulevard Historic District, 39-69 Bruckner Boulevard, the Bronx

Mosholu Parkway, the Bronx (1888; 1935-37): designed by Frederick Law Olmsted

Marx Brothers House, 179 East 93rd Street, Manhattan (vulnerable)

Rincon Criollo Casita, 499 East 158th Street, the Bronx

61 Fourth Avenue, Manhattan (1889): former home and studio of artists Robert Indiana and Robert Motherwell, revolutionary publisher and anti-censorship crusader Barney Rosset, and the groundbreaking Reuben Gallery (vulnerable)

Morrisania Baptist Church (formerly Congregation Adath Israel), 551 East 169th Street, the Bronx (1901): believed to be the oldest surviving purpose-built synagogue in the Bronx (currently threatened)

Proposed Beverly Square West and Ditmas Park West Historic Districts, Flatbush, Brooklyn (ca. 1898 to 1910): community leaders have advocated for over a decade to secure landmark designation for these rambling Victorian houses south of Prospect Park; designations approved in late 2025 left out nearly half of each proposed district (vulnerable)

Most Holy Redeemer Church, 173 East 3rd Street (1851; 1913): once one of New York's tallest and largest churches, this grand edifice played a critical role in the evolution of Catholic liturgy and fire safety regulations, while welcoming generations of immigrants from across central, southern, and Eastern Europe as well as Latin America (currently threatened).

Hunts Point Railroad Station, 904 Hunts Point Avenue, the Bronx (vulnerable)

Janta House, Elmhurst, Queens (demolished)

Morrisania Baptist Church (formerly Congregation Adath Israel), 551 East 169th Street, the Bronx (1901)

1520 Sedgwick Avenue, the Bronx: birthplace of hip-hop

Roosevelt Hotel, 45 East 45th Street, Manhattan (1924): developed as part of Grand Central's "Terminal City" and designed by George B. Post (threatened)

Former Evander Childs High School (original Bronx High School of Science building), 120 East 184th Street, the Bronx (1918): designed by noted NYC schools architect C.B.J. Snyder

Lewis Morris Apartments, 1749 Grand Concourse, the Bronx (1923): once considered the grandest apartment complex on the Grand Concourse

St. Raymond's Roman Catholic Church, 2380 East Tremont Avenue, the Bronx (1897)

50 West 13th Street, Manhattan (1846-47): house directly linked to the 19th-century abolitionist, civil rights, and women's suffrage movement, as well as 20th-century Off-Off Broadway and LGBTQ+ rights movements as home of the 13th Street Repertory Theatre. Landmarking campaign began in 2020 when house was first threatened, but Landmarks Preservation failed to act until June 2024, when first initial steps were taken to consider landmark designation (building landmarked in late October 2024), resulting in the house being stripped of historically and architecturally significant features.
